

Blog > Inspiration

10 best website ideas for building an online presence in 2026

Explore 10 of the best website ideas for building a brand or engaging an audience. Get design inspiration from examples by real businesses and creators.

Webflow Team

Table of contents

10 ideas for designing your own website

What the best websites have in common

Build a website that gets results with Webflow

Get started for free

Create custom, scalable websites — without writing code. Start building in Webflow.

Unleash your creativity → on the web

Whether you're starting a business or creating a community, the right website sets you up for success.

If you want to establish your brand online or attract followers, a website is a great way to gain visibility in search engines and social channels. A well-designed site is like a digital brochure, telling visitors who you are and what you offer.

But first, you need to decide which type of website will serve your needs and get your audience's attention. We've put together a list of the best website ideas you can use to showcase your work and share your passion.

10 ideas for designing your own website

Here are 10 great website ideas, broken down by site type.

1. Music events websites
2. Sports communities
3. Professional community hubs
4. Product showcases
5. Local service provider pages
6. Agency portfolios
7. Lifestyle events websites

Share

- 8. SaaS product pages
- 9. Creative portfolios
- 10. AI-powered tech sites

1. Music events websites

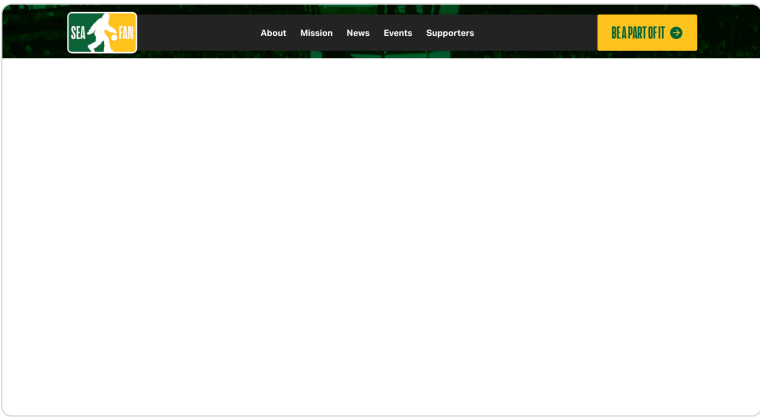

Source: Teletech

A great event site doesn't just sell tickets — it draws visitors in with on-brand interactive visuals and makes them feel like they're already part of the event.

Even before you see the name of Teletech's events website you can tell they organize dance and electronic music festivals thanks to the immersive, underground vibe. The site's dark and futuristic theme, fast-paced video backgrounds, and strobe-like visual effects simulate the type of experience attendees can expect, building anticipation and getting new visitors excited.

2. Sports communities

Source: Seattle NBA Fans

A fan community site is a powerful asset for sports teams of all sizes, as it can showcase sponsors and generate revenue through merchandise, meet-and-greet events, and fundraising drives.

'Fans' can also be a flexible label, going beyond spectators in the stands. You can solicit businesses the way Seattle NBA Fans does with their community website, which was designed to serve as a hub for connecting with Sonics fans. This site fosters engagement through clear calls to action (CTAs) that invite businesses to host an event or contribute a service.

Unlock exclusive Webflow content

Subscribe now for best practices, research reports, and more.

Business email

Enter your email

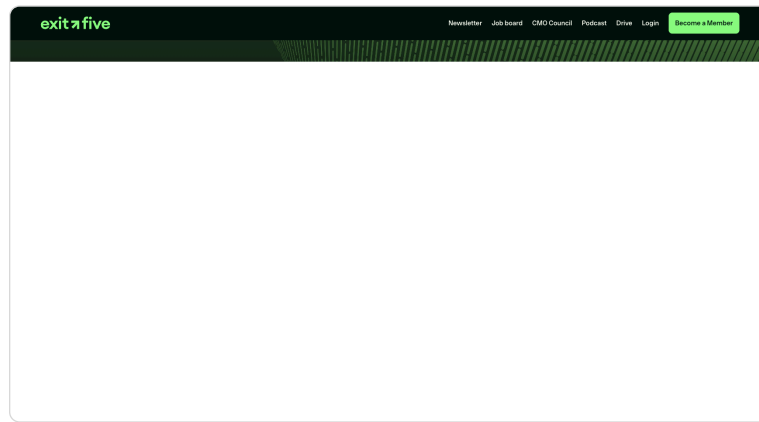

Country

United States

☐ I'd like to receive marketing communications regarding Webflow's products, services, and events. I understand I can unsubscribe at any time.

Subscribe

3. Professional community hubs

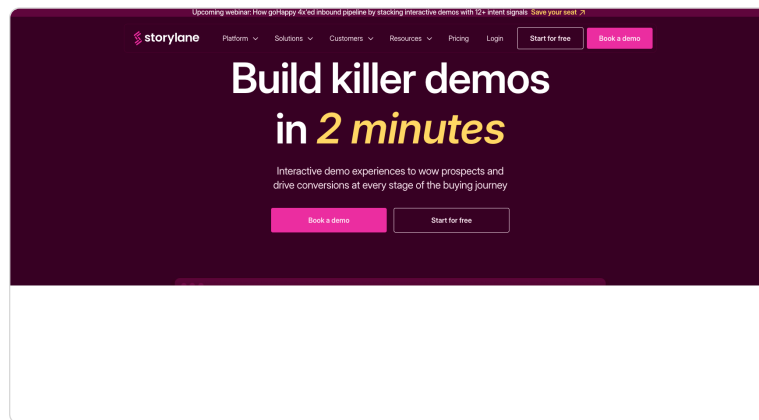

Source: Exit Five

Professional communities focus on their members' needs, and their websites usually include authoritative, value-driven messaging that entices visitors to join or get involved.

On Exit Five's website, this B2B community for marketers puts its most valuable content first. There's a newsletter subscription box as an immediate CTA, plus social proof from existing members and testimonials from fellow marketers. In addition, Exit Five includes clear navigation so visitors can quickly find relevant articles and job board listings.

4. Product showcases

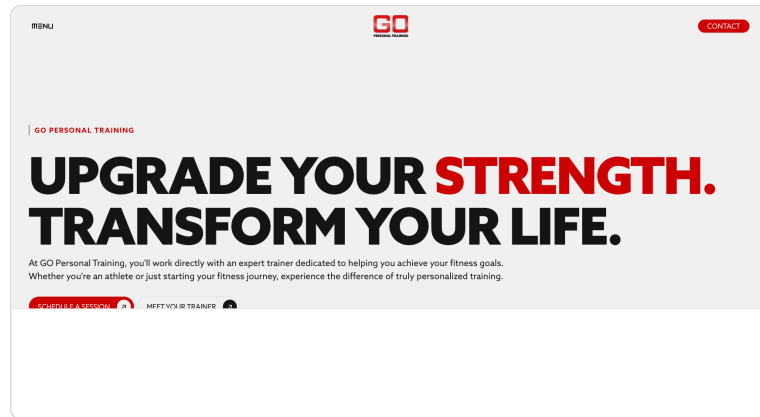

Source: Storylane

If you want to convert potential customers, your product website needs to convey its value and features as soon as visitors arrive.

Storylane, a SaaS business that helps companies build video demos, makes the product's value immediately clear with a short, bold heading: "Build killer demos in 2 minutes." Then it uses one of its own demos to walk users through the product's interface. For visitors who want more details, Storylane provides an extensive gallery of real customer projects, video testimonials, case studies, and a chatbot that can answer further questions.

5. Local service provider pages

Source: GO Personal Training

As a local service provider, your website needs to let visitors know why they should work with you and what steps to take next.

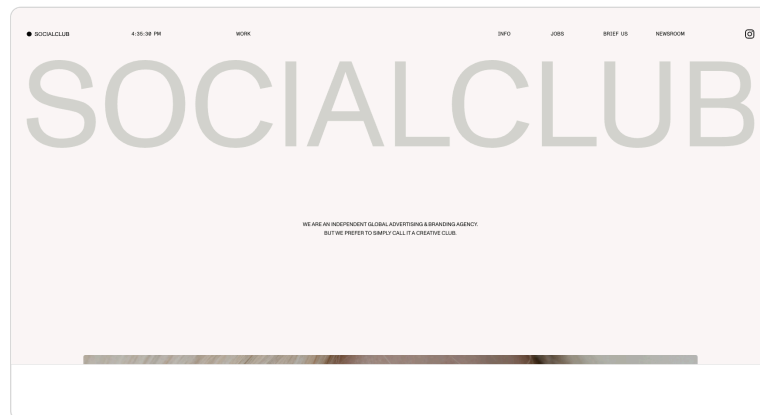

GO Personal Training positions its programs not as general classes, but as “personalized training solutions for every goal.” Each program listing includes a concise description of how it can help visitors achieve their fitness objectives. Plus, customer testimonials and multiple CTAs on every page keep the site focused on credibility and conversions.

Show off your work.

Choose from fully customizable portfolio templates built for creatives. With Webflow, you can design, refine, and publish a standout portfolio — without writing a single line of code.

Browse portfolio templates →

6. Agency portfolios

Source: Socialclub

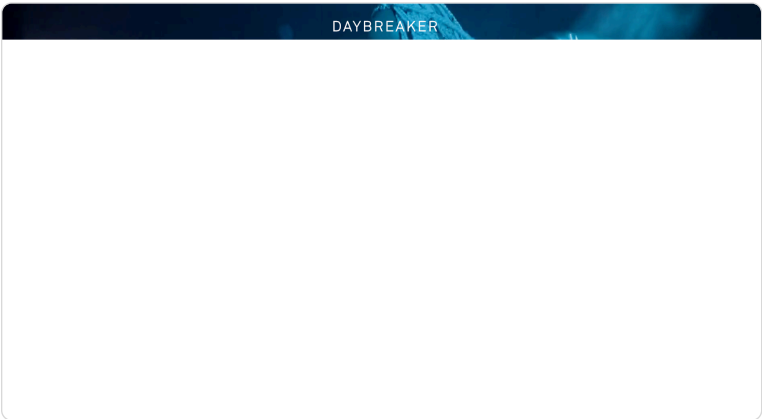

If your team provides a creative service, put it front and center so prospective clients can immediately see whether you match their needs.

Designer También, who designed the website for advertising and branding agency Socialclub, opted for a minimalist design with neutral colors and small font sizes. This allows the project showcases to stand out, thanks to the contrast provided by large colorful images filled with motion. By pairing those visuals with evocative titles like “Cheat on Your Friends

10 best website ideas for building an online presence in 2026

With Timeleft,” Socialclub provokes potential clients into exploring their work further.

7. Lifestyle events websites

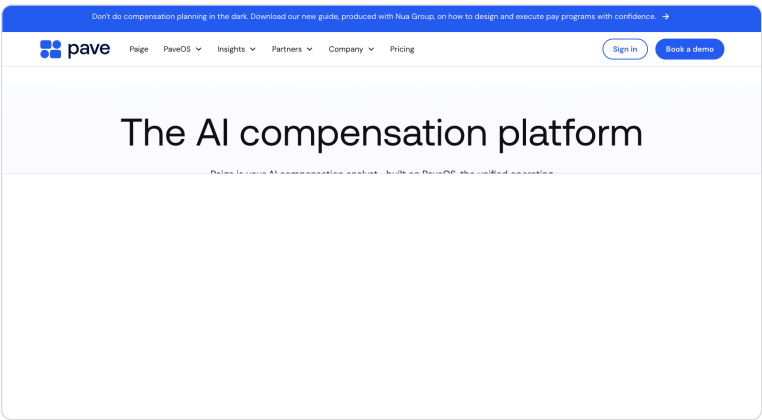

Source: Daybreaker

If you offer unusual services or experiences, you have more to teach visitors before they'll convert. So your website should be a portal that gets people interested and makes them feel like they're already part of the action.

When visitors land on Daybreaker's website, they immediately become part of this event designer's world. The entire above-the-fold section is a looping video that presents high-energy, human-centric montages, with enough fast motion, bright colors, and quick cuts to speak directly to the target audience's desire for excitement and community.

8. SaaS product pages

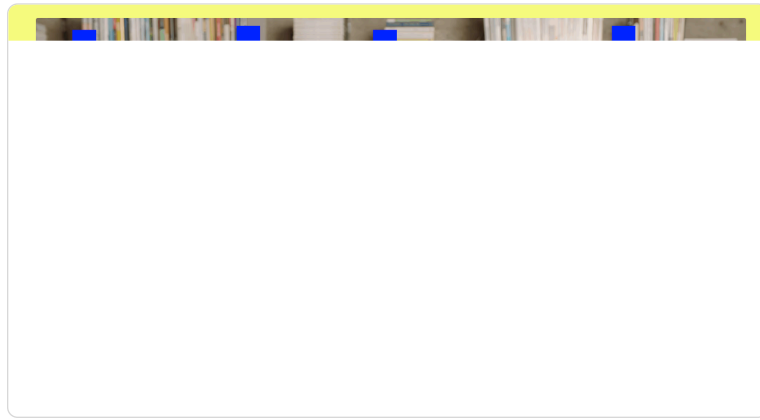

Source: Pave

SaaS websites often focus more on function than form — there's a lot of competition out there, so you need to convey the product's value and the brand's credibility before people have a chance to click away.

Pave's site is a great example, with a professional look and a layout that puts the most important information right at the top. The headline, subtitle, and CTA explain in plain language what the product is (an AI compensation platform), who it's helped (8,700+ companies), and what visitors should do (book a demo or learn more). After that, cards separate visitors into two funnels based on which version of the product they're interested in.

9. Creative portfolios

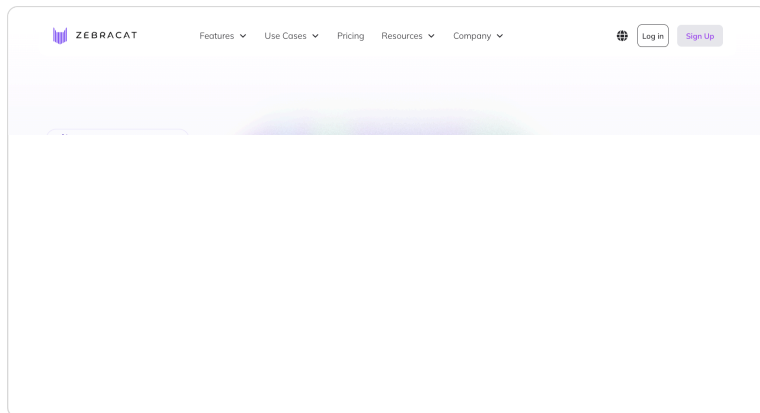

Source: Josh Jacobs

A portfolio site is essential for any creative professional who wants to showcase their best work and attract new clients.

Josh Jacobs' site spotlights the designer, leading with a large, smiling portrait that adds a human connection. The rest of the website shows the awards he's won, offers links to YouTube talks that demonstrate his expertise, and gives brief information about the kinds of projects he's worked on. This portfolio demonstrates how a creative can sell themselves as a brand, even if they don't have much work to show yet.

10. AI-powered tech sites

Source: Zebracat

There are few niches more crowded today than AI-powered tech, so a well-designed website is crucial for breaking into that market.

Zebracat is a video AI agent, and its website shows right away how this product is different from other tools — it produces quick, growth-focused social media videos. There's an example video right at the top, and a scrolling gallery of more projects just below the fold, along with plenty of actionable CTAs like "Start Growing Now" and "Create Your First Video."

Audiences look for AI tools when they want tasks done fast, and this site respects that by getting straight to the point and offering clear paths for education and conversion.

What the best websites have in common

Well-crafted websites balance form and function to guide visitors toward a goal, whether that's filling out a form or making a purchase. As you plan out your own site and come up with ideas for its web pages, be sure it has these essential elements:

- A clear purpose. The best idea for a website starts with intent and understanding — determine who your audience is, what their interests or needs are, and how you can speak to them effectively.
- Engaging and relevant content. Content is often the reason visitors stick around, so make sure all information is accurate and genuinely useful.
- A strong user experience. Your site represents your brand, and the experience of interacting with it will affect how people judge your value.
- High performance and reliability. If your website loads slowly or presents visitors with security warnings, your credibility will take a hit.
- Interactive features. Websites tend to be more engaging and memorable when they react directly to visitors, so consider adding interactive elements like hover states and animations.

Build a website that gets results with Webflow

Creating a new website is a big project, but if you start with a clear plan, you can build something your audience will get value from. Explore high-performing brands in your niche for website development ideas, and prioritize a streamlined user experience.

Fortunately, you don't have to be a web developer to create a great site — Webflow helps everyone design engaging and interactive pages. Our browser-based website experience platform offers features like visual editing, content management, search engine optimization, and repeatable design workflows. Plus, Webflow sites are fast and safe, thanks to features like a global content delivery network and built-in security.

Get started with Webflow today and create a high-impact, professional website.

Business website

Learn how to design, build, and publish a unique and professional website for your business in no time.

Start building →

Get started for free

Get started — it's free

Watch demo

Try Webflow for as long as you like with our free Starter plan. Purchase a paid Site plan to publish, host, and unlock additional features.

Product	Solutions	Company	Community
Platform	Enterprise	About	Discover the community
Design	Startups	Careers WE'RE HIRING	Partner with Webflow
Edit content	Global alliances	Press	Certified Partners
Interactions	Agencies	Webflow Ventures	Become a template designer
GSAP	Freelancers	Webflow Shop	Become an affiliate
Page building		Terms of Service	Become a Global Leader
Shared Libraries	Resources	Privacy policy	Find a meetup near you
Collaboration	University	Cookie policy
CMS	Blog	Accessibility statement	Get help
Hosting	Customer stories		Support
Localization	Webinars & ebooks	Compare	Pricing
Security	Apps	Contentful	Status
Ecommerce	Libraries	Framer	Community Homebase
Analyze	Templates	Sitecore	Wishlist
Optimize	Developers	Wix
SEO	Made in Webflow	WordPress

AEO NEW

Glossary

Webflow Cloud

Livestreams

DevLink LABS

The Webflow Way

Figma to Webflow LABS

Business Value Calculator

Accessibility

AI

© 2026 Webflow, Inc. All rights reserved

